This thesis owes gratitude to an array of people from various fields, without whose continuous support and encouragement this could not have been put in shape. The process of earning a doctorate and writing a thesis is long and arduous and can never be acquired unassisted. The journey initially appeared to be an individual one but finally turned out to be a collective one. There was never a single moment when I felt discouraged to complete the project. Probably that is why a journey undertaken in a group is always more fun. I would like to thank all the selfless beings who I encountered in my journey of ‘vision and mission’. The vision for the research work inspired me while the mission helped me explore routes to achieve the vision I lived for five years.

‘Stick to timeline’, ‘requires in-depth analysis’, ‘need more discussion’ were the favourite words of my supervisor Prof. Debarshi Prasad Nath which also worked as an antibiotic to the procrastination ailment I suffered during the course. His interest, dedication and strictness have been majorly responsible for completing my work. I would not miss the opportunity to take this space to express my genuine thankfulness and indebtedness to my mentor and guide. His meticulous scrutiny has helped me a great extent to accomplish the task at hand. My visions about this research work would not have been realized without my guide who showed me the right directions with his timely and scholarly advice. This research is just a drop of water in the sea of knowledge my supervisor is.

Being a part-time scholar, it was challenging for me to keep myself on right track with the study. Thanks to my tech-savvy guide who would not only respond to my queries but also give bunch lot of home works time to time through e-mails and apps with the intention that I stay on track and don’t board the wrong train. ‘Aye! Dokter, what simplistic comment is this! This is not how you are supposed to write, deconstruct it further; try to study from all possible angles’, was often my guide’s comment on my write-up. This forced me to analyse things more deeply and made me pose question as to ‘why certain things happen the way it happens?’ This indeed was a special gift from my guide. There were times I would pray before sleep to see less red highlighted marks on my write-up the next day. Drafts after drafts, my write-up would still have that red mark.

Even as I am to submit my work after series of scrutiny, I am sure my guide will highlight reds on a sentence or two. This at times did make me sad, but it only goes to show that there is a difference between a guide and a scholar and that this very quality of my guide undoubtedly makes him an ideal guide every scholar would fast for. Thank you, Sir, for being the human map to my destination and the light in shining armour!

I would like to offer my sincerest thanks to other faculties from the department of Cultural Studies, Tezpur University for the constructive criticism during all my progress seminars. The suggestions added to the enrichment of the content.

If I am of anything worth today, I would credit it to my family. They have been the undrainable source of energy in my life. My decision to opt for Ph. D according to them is the only wise decision I ever made in my life. With such positive outlook, I could continue my journey without a hitch. My mother and sister are two being whom I owe my life. They made me believe that I am worth anybody's appreciation. This believe always gave me that extra bit of confidence I lack at times. I fall back to them for all my confusions and tensions and the duo would never disappoint me. A special mention for my sister; You are the best sister in the world and I am an awesome little sister too. I am the luckiest of all luck to have found a human dairy in you to scribble all of me. I also thank my brother-in-law Dr. Dimong Padung who has been of constant support and motivated me in my academic pursuit. I thank my three younger brothers Dakto, Dakjum and Daknya for fixing last moment emergencies in my works and supporting me in my endeavour.

I place on record my appreciation and gratefulness to the HoD of Mass Communication department, Rajiv Gandhi University, Prof. Kh Kabi for encouraging me to complete my Ph.D and granting me leave to carry out my field work and attend progress seminars at Tezpur University. I am also grateful to my colleagues for filling in the gap during my absence. I appreciate my students from the department for doing their assigned projects on my absence.

I acknowledge the contributions of Marge Karlo, Sengo Taipodia, Tagi Zirido, Mikjom Tasso, administrative officers of Likabali, Dhemaaji and Banderdewa, Ratna Tayeng, staff of Assam State Archive, State Musuem Library, journalists from Arunachal Pradesh and Assam for all relevant documents and inputs for the study. Sincere thanks to senior journalist PK Behera for guiding me time to time. A large portion of my gratitude lies to all the informants for their inputs about the study area and for giving a dynamic perspective to the study of borders.

The most demanding team in my research journey has been my friends. Since the enrolment in Ph.D to this date, they have been pushing my attention to achieve the goal despite all my efforts to take a little break from the research work. I thank Cindy Deori, Sapna Tayem, Rinchin Tsomu, Ruma Nguri, Tagung Changrang, Padi Aji, Bijay Gara, and Dobom Riba for being the arrowhead dipped in golden words ‘When are you submitting?’ thus making a remarkable force in assembling the motivation to accomplish through the challenges in writing. I also thank Moi Moni Basar Kamdak who continued to inspire me and gave me the strength when I needed one.

I thank Dina Swargiari, Wanlaya Namtham, Rituporna Hazarika, Ivy Daimary, Darshana Liyanage, Taw Azu, Ananya Bonjotsna, and Bhupali Kashyap who I met during the course of my journey for offering their expertise, time and making my stay in the campus a wonderful experience.

I also thank my former colleagues from The Dawnlit Post and proprietor Marbom Mai for being supportive during my work. Special mention goes to my brother in TDP office Tanom Jerang who helped me collect media reports on the subject.

I am also indebted to the UGC’s Centre with Potential for Excellence in Particular Areas granted to the Department of Cultural Studies to work on the theme ‘Cultural Memory in North East India: A Research and Documentation Programme of Visual and Textual Narratives’ for making their valuable materials available to me in completing a major part of sub-chapter 4.2 (Stories about life on the other side of the border: myths and realities) of the thesis.

I thank all who came into my life for teaching me beautiful lessons and thank life itself for it continue to amaze me in all fronts.

I can't thank enough to my dear brother Late Bomto Kamdak (Deputy Superintendent of Police) who I lost during my research journey. I thank him for teaching me and making me believe that there is nothing more important than shouldering one's responsibilities and playing the role of a 'Real Hero' in the act called life. He was the only one to believe that the next set of hippies (non-conformists for good) in town would be academicians. Thank you Nyibi (brother)! for being the 'Real Hero' in my life and many others.
